☐ Before submitting your claim, visually inspect your SurgeShield device at the electric meter. If the device light is ON, it is an indication that the device is functioning properly. Please note that device lights are easier to see at night when there is no direct sunlight. For assistance locating the device light, please visit www.FPLHome.com/surgedevice. Please be aware that your home appliances may fail for a variety of reasons other than a failure of the surge protection device to properly perform, including normal wear and tear and power surges that can enter your home through other channels, such as cable and phone lines. Please understand that FPL Home may need to remove the SurgeShield device from your home for testing to verify whether the device has, in fact, failed to properly perform. If, after completing the above steps, you continue to believe that the SurgeShield surge protector device has failed to properly perform and that failure has resulted in damage to the appliances covered by the limited manufacturer's warranty, please complete the claim form and provide all requested documentation.

For Electronics Surge Protection program customers (or SurgeShield program customers who have confirmed their device light is OFF or who have decided to file a claim even though the device light is ON, indicating that the device is properly functioning), select one of the following options to start your claim:
